

BUAD 642: RESPONSIBLE BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT

This course investigates the role of the organization in managing its environmental impact from a local, regional, national, and global perspective. Students consider the use of natural resources in the design and production of goods and services; in the construction and use of the facilities in which they produce and deliver and in the materials and methods used to transport them. It contemplates cradle-to-cradle design and usage of products, and it further examines the events and developments organizations need to consider in their long-range planning, based on anticipated changes in the earth's environment.
